"Miss Mary Johnston, who will deliver an address this evening at 8:30 o'clock at the Chamber of Commerce auditorium, arrived in the city last night and is with relatives.

"Miss Johnston is widely known as an author. She has published a number of books within the last fitteen years, her name springing into fame with the publication of the first—"Prisoners of Hope." It was followed by several historical novels of colonial days and a later period, each marked by the genius of the first. The titles are. "To Have and to Hold," "Andrey," "Sir Mortimer" and finally, this winter, "The Long Roll," a dramatic and exceptionally accurate picture of events of Civil War time, executed with all the brilliance and beauty possible to her facile pen. Each of these books had a wide circulation in Alabama, where Miss Johnston's work has attracted notice both because of its merit and because of the Writer's local connection. She is a former resident of this city, her father, Major John W. Johnston, having made his home here for many years until the time of his death. Among the

The best one of the lot was the youngest who was not only permitted to retain his commission in the army and all his military distinctions, but had entrusted to him the administration of the questions all force proceedings could be completed, the Raiser interferred, and, taking the advantage of the fact that the Baroness von Liebenberg had force green of the lot was the youngest who was not only permitted to retain his commission in the army and all his military distinctions, but had entrusted to him the administration of the question of the three princes by their parents. Their mother was a scion of the extremely rich house of Saxe-Altenburg.

Altenburg.
The eldest of the three princes, Frederick Henry by name, a man now of about forty years of age and colossally tail, became involved in auch unsavory scandals that on the report of the colonel commanding his regiment, he was compelled to hand in the resignation of his commission. Now for a German prince of the blood to be without a commission is a frightful disgrace. About a year ago it was announced that he was traveling about in southern italy with a couple of Jesuit priests. The members of this order are celebrated all over the world for their skill in the rescue of men, essingers, and a rather pretty woman.
Prince Joachim Albert, on the other

The second brother is perhaps the most gifted of all three, he was christened Joachim Abert, and is about thirty-six years of age. His quafrei with the Kaiser, with his military superiors and with all his relatives, has been owing to a mesalliance, under rather strange circumstances. It is an episode which has been portrayed in the comic papers, and on the operation of the comic papers, and on the operation of the comic papers, and on the operation of the comic papers. The comic papers are described in the comic papers, and on the operation of count Hohenstein. His wife, whom he insists in his morganatic consort, is Baroness Marle von Liebengnition, as well as that of his eldest rother, Frederick Henry, as Prussian lines.

be deprived of nine-tenths of his share of the estate, But the will neglected to provide that this disinaeriting clause should create a trust fund of his share the trust to remain permanently operative after the testator's demise, and the division of the estate. The consequence was that when not long afterwards the old duke died very suddenly and the executors attempted to withhold nine-tenths of Joachim Albert's share of the fortune, he at once commenced legal proceedings to exact his entire share, and won his case. When Joachim Albert thereupon still further defied the Kaiser, by marrying the actress, he found himself at once subjected to the same penalties as those inflicted on his brother Prince Frederick Henry.

The only part of the junishment which the prince really feels at all in his exile from Prussia—the part that lies outside the capital. For he enjoys himself much more when traveling about incognito with immense wealth at his disposal in the company of his pretty actress wife, than make hing his headquarters at the court of Berlin, and being generally subject to the somewhat stern dicliptine of his by no means easy-going cousin Emperor William.

I have mentioned that he goes by the name of Count Hohenhausen—it is one of the titles belonging to his family—but not the querrarrangement by which his wife came to be Baroness von Liebenberg. It seems that as old Grandduke Albert appeared to be taking a long time in dying. Joachim Albert and his fiance became impatient, and wished to be married without further delay. But that clause in the will forbidding him to marry any woman but a lady of rank stood in the way. Accordingly Marie Sulzri eff the stage, and a penniless Austrian nobleman was found of the name of Baron Victor von Liebenberg who undertook for a substancial consideration, to well Marie Sulzri for hondon and to leave her at the church door, afterwards getting a divorce. This marriage would give her a nobiliary status so that the clause in the old grandduke's will, forbidding Joachim Albert to m
